

After Arkansas inmate Dennis Horton was written up and found guilty of disciplinary charges involving possession of alcohol and drugs, he brought this 42 U.S.C. § 1983 action against some of the prison officials involved. The district court<sup>1</sup> dismissed his complaint, and this appeal followed. Having carefully reviewed the record and the parties' briefs, we agree with the district court, for the reasons explained in its order, that Horton's complaint failed to state a constitutional violation.

Accordingly, we affirm. See 8th Cir. R. 47B.
