PER CURIAM.

Vincent Canalli Lee sued Richard Stinson and other officials of the General Services Administration (GSA) after Lee's unsuccessful effort to purchase the former federal building in Kansas City, Missouri. The district court granted summary judgment in favor of the public officials. After careful review of the record and the parties' briefs, we conclude that an extensive discussion is not warranted, and we also decline to consider the arguments Lee raises for the first time on appeal. We believe the district court's decision is correct, and we affirm substantially for the reasons given by the district court. See 8th Cir. R. 47B.
